Prompt #1: Problems, Pains, and Challenges

<Topic: (provide topic)
For the above topic, what are some common and uncommon problems people experience?>

<What are the pains someone might experience intensely if they don't solve these problems? Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.>

<What are the challenges preventing people from solving these problems and avoiding these pains? Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.>

Prompt #2: 27-word persuasion

<Avatar: Avatar Description (TYPE AVATAR DEMOGRAPHICS)
Topic: General topic description (TYPE TOPIC LIKE PROMPT #1)
Generate a list of relevant topics that the avatar cares about and describe each item in a way that outlines:

1) Fears, 2) Dreams, 3) Suspicions, 4) Failures, and 5) Enemies.

<What FEARS might someone experience if they're experiencing these pains, problems, and challenges? Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.

<Who might they BLAME if they continue to these pains, problems, and challenges? Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.

<What tasks, solutions, or actions have they done in the past to attempt to eliminate those problems, overcome these challenges, and remove the pain?
Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.

<If someone performs those tasks, solutions, and actions, what desires will they fulfill if they achieve their goals? Be specific, detailed, unique, and uncommon. Provide 5 examples.

Prompt #3: Prospect's Day-to-Day Life

<Write a 400-word emotional diary entry from the first-person perspective who is tired of PROBLEMS and hopes to achieve their DREAMS>

Modifiers:
Change the PROBLEMS and DREAMS if you want.
Add more adjectives.
Add outlines, key characters, scenes, situations, and final outcome.

Let's start with writing.

Some of the frameworks AI knows:

- AIDA (Attention, Interest, Desire, Action)
- SSS (Star, Story, Solution)
- PAS (Pain, Agitation, Solution)
- PASOP (Problem, Agitation, Solution, Outcome, Proof)
- PAISA (Problem, Agitation, Invalidation, Solution, Action)
- AICPBSAWN (Attention, Interest, Credibility, Proof, Benefits, Arouse Wants, Now)

There are a few more. You can ask ChatGPT.

The Email Prompt.

<Write an email using the AICPBSAWN framework. Outline the benefits of conversion copywriting that coaches will experience.>

Modifier:
<Rewrite the email above. Make it shorter. Explain how conversion copywriting can help coaches achieve their dreams, can eliminate their challenges, and provide proof to back up the claims about the service.>

<Rewrite in the style of John Carlton. Make the opening line more emotional.>

The FB AD Prompt.

<Generate 5 different hooks for Facebook ads on conversion copywriting services for coaches.>

Modifier:
<Use #3 as the hook. Write 3 Facebook ads that announce we're now offering Conversion Copywriting service (that costs $2,000) that has over 50+ satisfied clients and create a sense of anticipation and excitement for coaches with a clear and compelling Call to Action. Do not mention the cost of the Facebook Ad.>

Modifiers for Emails and FB Ads.

- Make it engaging
- Appeal to their problems
- Share positive experiences by followers
- Encourage them to act
- Persuade them to try it
- Add urgency and FOMO
- Limited exclusive deals
- Use user-generated content
- Explain problems it can solved in a detailed way

What you need to make it "pop" "Make sure to highlight that"

- Your positioning
- Uniqueness
- Social Proof

Prompt #4: Before and After State #1

Name several things your customer avatar wants that they don't have yet.

What do they want for themselves?
What do they want for the people around them (family, friend, coworkers, employees, etc.)?
What do they aspire to be?
What goals have they set for themselves?
What values do they hold dear?
What are their "secret" desires?

Prompt #5: Before and After State #2

A good product or service will deliver the "after" state your avatar wants. And good marketing will articulate that transformation from before to after.

Needless to say, getting clear on the desired outcome your offer delivers is fundamental to the success of your business.

You'll learn how to pinpoint the value you bring to the market by understanding the transformation your product or service offers.

You'll do it by asking these 10 questions.

What does your prospect HAVE in the before state?
What does your prospect HAVE in the after state?
How does your prospect FEEL in the before state?
How does your prospect FEEL in the After state?
What is an AVERAGE DAY like for your prospect in the before state?
What is an AVERAGE DAY like for your prospect in the after state?
What is your prospect's STATUS in the before state?
What is your prospect's STATUS in the after state?

What is an EVIL that is plaguing the prospect in the before state?
How does your prospect conquer it and bring more GOOD to the world in the after state?

Average marketers only articulate what a customer will HAVE if they purchase their product or service.

Great marketers speak to the transformations around how the customer will FEEL, how their AVERAGE day will hange, how their STATUS will elevate, and how they will solve an EVIL in the world (making them a real-life hero)

PROMPT #6 - MARKET RESEARCH

Step #1: The research you do depends on the sales copy you will write.
Are you going to write:
Emails?
FB Ads?
Advertorials?
Sales Letters?
Landing Pages?
Ecom Product Pages?
Social Media Posts?
The length and the medium matters.
Here's why:
If you're going to write a sales letter, your headline can have more than 7 words.
If you're writing an email, it's different. Your email shouldn't exceed 4 words so it's readable on mobile.
Step #2: The data you need to find for during research.
I have an exhausting list.
But you can start by answering these questions:
What is the offer?
Who is the target market?
What are their pain points?

What’s the transformation they desire?
What are their dreams?
What are their failures?
What are their suspicions?
What are their victories?
Who/What is their enemy?
What’s the unique way the product solves their problem?
What’s the counterintuitive way the product solves their problem?
What are the stories/testimonials the reader will relate with?
What are their beliefs?
What attitudes do they have?
What are their buying impulses? (seasonal, quarterly, always looking)
What is the market already using (who are your competitors)
What's their experience like using other products?
What do they like about existing products?
What don't they like about existing products?
Step #3: Where to find data
There are a LOT of places you can find data.
But the “go-to” for finding info like this?
Reddit forums and subreddits
Facebook groups
Niche forums
Amazon reviews

PROMPT #7 - The 27 Objections You Must Annihilate to Create High-Converting Sales Copy

1. It won't work for me. You're special
2. I don't know where to start.
3. I don't have enough money. It's too expensive.

4. This is too much work.
5. I'm too busy to do this.
6. I've already tried this before and it didn't work.
7. Why is this any different from product X, Y, or Z?
8. I don't believe you.
9. I don't need it.
10. Why am I only hearing about this now?
11. Does this really work?
12. I'm confused and overwhelmed.
13. I'm not sure if I should buy from YOU.
14. Now's not a good time.
15. I've already bought a similar product. No thanks.
16. I have to ask my boss/wife/girlfriend/husband/boyfriend/pastor/dog/Thanos...etc.
17. Product X is cheaper. Isn't product Y better/faster/bigger?
18. You don't have/offer this feature
19. What happens if I don't like it?
20. You're new, right? I haven't heard from you before.
21. Is this safe to use/buy?
22. How do I know this is right for me?
23. Is this going to be fun/enjoyable for me?
24. Will I need _____ to make this work?
25. You don't understand my problem.
26. How long will it take to work?
27. What if I have questions or need help?

Before you start getting overwhelmed, I wanna assure you...
You Don't Have to Annihilate Every Single Objection...
Find the MOST PRESSING objections your prospect has.
Focus on answering that.
How do you know which are the important objections and not-so-important objections?
Research. 🙂

Prompt #8 - Jack’s Prompting

You will act as a social media copywriter in our business, and you specialize in social media posts that focus on storytelling and authenticity. Your personality type are engaging, genuine, warm, concise, and friendly.

You're going to work for CJ Salamida, and his business, RevUp Solutions, which helps supplement businesses in the e-commerce industry use email marketing to forge loyal, repeat customers and boost MRR to 20-30%., to tell better stories with more authenticity on social media to build an audience they can later convert into clients.

The pain points of the audience are:

Lack of repeat business
Difficulty in increasing revenue
Limited knowledge of email marketing
Fears of losing customers
Concerns about competition

Prompt #9 - CLEAR Framework

I want to train you the CLEAR Copywriting method for creating social media posts.
The 5 elements to CLEAR copywriting method that I do for social media:
The first element which is important in the beginning of any social media post is the "Curiosity Hook".
You need to grab people's attention with something bold that captures their attention and curiosity.
It should be short, but bold.
The second element is the "Lead in" which draws people's attention to read further into the social media post.
This lead in would further the curiosity from the bold headline from the curiosity hook.
The third element is "Emotion" - you want to get your audience to feel emotionally invested in your story.
This could be how you feel, or how something made you feel, or it can invoke an emotion from the audience that you want them to feel.
The fourth element is to "Analyze" something that would establish authority and educate the audience with something of value.
An example of this would be a life lesson, a story or parable, or analyzing a current situation.
The fifth and final element is "Reaction".
We want to end every social media post with the main goal to get people to react.
This doesn't mean to put a cheesy call to action at the end of every post, but to reinforce the point and lesson of the post to get people to either agree or disagree.
The posts are about provoking thought, discussion, and engagement on the post.
Do you understand?

Write a post about "your topic here". Follow the CLEAR copywriting method to write the post.

Prompt #10 -Viral Video Scriptmaker

The “Short-Form Viral Video Scriptmaker” specializes in crafting scripts for “talking head” TikTok videos. Its key focus is to start with strong hook, capturing the viewer’s attention immediately. The scripts will be designed to add value, either by solving a problem or by providing entertainment, like humor. Each script will also include a clear call to action, encouraging viewer engagement. The GPT’s interaction style will be creative, engaging, and tailored to suit the user’s needs, while ensuring the content is suitable for a wide TikTok audience. The GPT will maintain a balance between professionalism and a casual, relatable tone to suit the TikTok platform.

The tone should consistently maintain an educational yet witty demeanor but not cringy and predictable.

Do not use common business phrases like “game-changer”, this is cringy and too salesy. Try to produce a script a human would read and not sound AI produced. Don’t start with “Here’s the thing” or make it sound like an ad, it needs to be more of a ‘how to’ video that gives value.

Don’t be cringy and use “vibe” or gen-z words. All scripts must fit within a 1 minute timeframe and as close to 160 words as possible.

Scripts must focus on the given topic, adhere to the best practices of TikTok videos, and aim to maximize retention from the target audience. Pleas refrain from starting with “hey”; instead jump right in with a scroll-stopping “here is..”, “this is…,” “here are..,” “these are”, “I found something to solve”, “I hate how”, “so you want to”, or “here is a marketing software I could not live without”

1. You will ask the user what topic they want the video to be about
2. You will ask them for any takeaways or points to discuss in the video.
3. You will ask what the call to action should be for the video
4. Then, ask them about their target audience for the video

Note: Do not set up scenes, you just output a video script for a teleprompter.

You will respond with the following:

3 alternative opening hooks to choose from
Output the video script for teleprompter
After you create the video script, display this message.

Always use “You” perspective.
Don’t say “Bad”, use “Terrible”.
Don’t say “Tips”, use “Secrets”.
Don’t say “Improve”, use “Transform”
Don’t say “Cheap”, use “Affordable”

Here are viral hooks that went millions of views.

Viral Hooks:

My 11-Step Process for Creating Engaging Copy that Works in Today's AI-Powered World

Use this as your cheat sheet for writing human copy that gets attention, deeply resonates with your prospects, and converts at scale…
There's ONE FACT many copywriters miss when writing copy…
Your ads are interrupting your prospects' day.
Your prospects aren't waiting for your pitch.
Your prospects are busy, distracted, and have probably seen anywhere between 2,000-5,000 ads already THAT day…
…before even seeing yours.
If that's not enough...
AI Content Made Prospects Doubt Marketers Even More
Let me ask you:
When you see content or copy that had hints of AI copywriting, are you...
A: Impressed they're using AI tools
OR...
B: Turned off and think that marketer is lazy
There's a big chance you'll get turned off, right?
That's not just you.
That's not just us copywriters.
Every single person in the world thinks this way. haha.
So now the question now is...
How Can You Write Sales Copy That's Levels Above AI-Generated Ads?
The answer is quite simple...
Be more human
Be in-depth, emotional and specific
Trigger subconscious hot buttons
I'll give you a brief overview here.
It starts with in-depth research…
Then swiping…
Then writing…
And then editing…
That's what consists this 11-step process.
So without further delay...

Here's My 11-Step Process For Writing Ads That Are Levels Above AI-Generated Copy

RESEARCH PHASE

Step #1: Find a challenging accomplishment your ideal prospect wants to achieve…

✅ Why do your prospects want to achieve this? What are the problems that will be eliminated, wants fulfilled, and needs satisfied when they achieve this?

✅ Use the 27-Word Persuasion Sentence (by Blair Warren) to quickly identify the psychographics of your market

✅ What are the positive identity-based benefits they gained because of this accomplishment?

✅ What are the negative identity-based fears they squashed because of this accomplishment?

✅ What's the story of how they accomplished this amazing feat?

The objective: you want to be SPECIFIC when talking about their problems, wants, needs, fears, frustrations, and dreams.

AI spits out generic copy that talks about “earning P100K per month.”

Once you’ve done this step, you’ll know that earning P100K per month is not the real goal.

The real goal is to escape survival mode.

The real goal is to pay off debts.

The real goal is to feel accomplished.

The real goal is to provide for the family.

The real goal is to finally NOT feel like a loser.

Always remember…

Add layers to your sales copy. Be specific, detailed, and in-depth when describing their identity, situation, wants, needs, etc.

Once you do this, AI can’t beat you. 🙂

Next…

Step #2: The PASA Table…

✅ Identify the BIG DOMINO problem why people struggle to achieve that

✅ What are the the existing solutions to solve the problem

✅ Consequences of not solving problem or delaying action

✅ (OPTIONAL) A new way to solve an old BIG DOMINO problem
PASA means Problem, Agitation, Solution and Advantage.
Create a table where…
Column #1 = Problem
Column #2 = Agitation
Column #3 = Solution
Column #4 = Advantage
For every problem you identified (Column #1), you want to explain the consequences (Column #2) when they delay finding the solution.
Next, you want to suggest a solution (Column #3) that's better than most out there.
And then tell them the advantages (Column #4) of using this solution over other existing solutions.
This is good mental practice because it helps you think outside the box.
When you're starting out, you don't have to fill every column though. But if you can, it can help you write compelling ads faster.
By the way, there's an AI prompt for this. 🙂
I won't share it with you in this post. Maybe next time. Because we have to go through the other steps first. 🙂
Step #3: Inner and external dialogue about the BIG DOMINO problem (both positive and negative)
✅ Find misconceptions they have about the BIG DOMINO problem and existing solutions
✅ What are the wrong beliefs they have about the accomplishment they want, challenges they're experiencing, the outcome they want, etc.
✅ What does their culture, environment, or upbringing say about getting the accomplish
"Miguel, it's like you're reading my mind…"
I had customers tell me that in the past.
The only reason I could do that is because I had insight about…
What they tell themselves internally
What others tell them about a certain topic
The deeply held beliefs they had that they don't question
There's this saying in copywriting research…

“If you can write a journal entry in your prospects’ diary and they think they wrote it (not you), you’ve done enough research…”
That’s kinda been my goal. 🙂
Step #4: Current situation (hell) → Dream scenario (heaven)
✅ Create two columns. One for the current situation they hate. The next is the opposite they want to experience.
✅ You can also the other way around. Think of a dream scenario they’ve always wanted to experience. What’s the opposite of that? Place that in column #1 (hell scenario).
The fastest way to gain attention is CONTRAST.
When you have an all-black background and you’re wearing a bright red dress, you immediately stand out.
Stand out = attention.
When you tell them about their current situation they DISLIKE and then show them there’s an ESCAPE to paradise…
Your prospects will latch on to that promise of escape.
Because you made a contrast. You made them aware they dislike their current situation. You showed them that it’s not pleasant.
Now they know there’s an escape, they’ll want to know more.
And if you can describe this hell and heaven in specific, granular detail that resonates with their identity…
You’ll retain and isolate their attention. They won’t look for other solutions anywhere.
Your prospects will wait for you.
Now that you’ve done that, let’s go to the next section…
SWIPING PHASE
Step #5: Collect the best ad copy you've seen in the 12-18 months.
The more relevant and recent, the better. Not saying the classic ads don’t work.
But the sophistication of the market has skyrocketed.
Check the Facebook Ads Library.
But the best source is your clients and network.
Ask them who their competitors are, what their current offers are, and what they think are their best performing ads.

Step #6: Let AI tools break down the ad copy, make a template/framework, and test it on various topics.
This is pretty straightforward.
You want to know why the ad worked, the trigger points they're targeting, the emotional hot buttons they're triggering, etc.
You want to be specific about what you want to learn from the ads you swiped.
You're doing this NOT because you want to copy them.
You're doing this to understand the WHY behind the ads.
At the end of the day, marketing and copywriting is a competitive sport.
You want to get inside your competition's mind to get an advantage.
Like Kobe's #MambaMentality. 🙂
WRITING PHASE
Step #7: Market Awareness and market sophistication match
I'm quite surprised a lot of copywriters don't know what market sophistication is.
To me, these are the basics.
If you don't know what this is and how to implement it in your copy, I suggest you start reading Eugene Schwartz's book…
To give you a quick run down…
Stage 1 = Basic Promise
Stage 2 = Bigger Promises
Stage 3 = Unique Mechanism
Stage 4 = Unique Mechanisms + Specific Promises
Stage 5 = All + Identity Marketing
From what I've heard, there's a new stage.
It's called "Category King."
Think of Coca Cola or Xerox.
The market has elevated them to a status where they won't be dethroned anytime soon.
So how do you use this?
Well, if your competition is writing at Stage 3 level, you must write at Stage 4 and Stage 5 level.
Next, you have to combine this with the market awareness level you want to target.

I can write an entire post about this. But let's settle for this now. 🙂
Next…
Step #8: Brainstorm attention grabbing hooks, open loops, and cliff hangers.
The battle for attention now is crazy. Some even say we're in the "Attention Economy."
The more attention you get = more sales you generate.
That's why…
You must know how to write hooks that get attention…
You must know how to write open loops that retain attention…
You must know how to write cliffhangers that create anticipation…
You can go to any AI tool or do a quick google search to know what these terms are.
You can even ask for examples you can swipe.
Once you've done that…
Step #9: Write using the Simplest Frameworks: AIDVVA, CPMT, and PWAT
AIDA is dead. AIDA only worked in the past because the only way you can get attention is through the news, TV, books, magazines, and experts.
That's why AIDA evolved into AIDVVA. I didn't come up with this. Alen Sultanic (one of the best marketers right now) mentioned this in one of his posts.
AIDVVA means Attention, Interest, Desire, Verify, Validate, Action. Your prospects will always verify your claims and promises. They'll also test your methods before doing any action.
CPMT is a framework I came up with. It means Call out problem, Promise something big, Mechanism of problem and solution, and then Testimonial + Tease.
PWAT is a framework created by Jerod Harlan (7-figure email marketer). PWAT has two meanings. I explained this framework in one of my posts in the past.
You can search for them here.
The reason why I highlight these frameworks is because there's a demand for shorter ads.
We call these "click driver" ads.

You’re not educating, telling stories, or making them know, like and trust you.
You just want them to CLICK.
Practice these type of ads and I’m sure you’ll get a gig soon.
A lot of copywriters were trained to create “relationship-building” copy – which takes a while.
Only a few are trained to write click-driver campaigns – because there’s a lot of testing involved.
A click driver angle that works today might not work next week.
So you have to know the “what, why, and how” of click driver ads.
Understanding these 3 simple frameworks is a good start.
EDITING PHASE
Step #10: Edit using CUBA, NESB, and RCI.
This is probably the most boring part of the process.
But it’s the MOST CRUCIAL.
Don’t skip this step. If you do, it will show. I promise you.
The best way is to start with CUBA.
CUBA means confusing, unbelievable, boring, and awkward.
Make sure your copy is not any of those.
Next, you want to make sure that your sales message is on point.
You can use NESB – which means New, Easy, Safe and Big.
Your ads must have at least 3 out of the 4. If you can have 4 of 4, then great!
Lastly, check your copy’s flow using RCI – which means Reaction, Curiosity, Intrigue/Interest.
You want to put words that trigger an emotional reaction. Next an open loop or cliffhanger. Finally, new information or take that they need to know about.
Step #11: Get free AI voice tool to read your copy out loud
This is an OG step that many have stopped doing.
I remember listening to podcasts where old school copywriters do this before submitting their first drafts.
Sometimes they had their kids read it out loud --- because if kids can read and comprehend it, it means the copy is 4th grade reading level or below.
The #1 goal here is cognitive fluence.
You want prospects to NOT re-read the copy you wrote.

You want your copy to go from screen to subsconscious brain.
The fastest way to determine this is by listening to your copy.
So...
If the AI voice is struggling to read it outloud…
If you’re struggling to comprehend the copy…
Then you have to revise it.
Revise, edit, and iterate until you can comprehend the copy you wrote.
Asking for feedback from friends and other copywriters would be a beneficial step as well.
But if you’re alone in your journey, you can do this…
WHOOOOOOOOH
If You’ve Read This Far, You Consumed Over 1,800+ Words Already — Congratulate Yourself 🙂
You’re really serious about copywriting.
I’m so happy because I know following only 2-3 out of the 11 steps can elevate your copy to new heights.
To summarize everything…
Step #1: Find a challenging accomplishment your ideal prospect wants to achieve…
Step #2: The PASA Table
Step #3: Inner and external dialogue about the BIG DOMINO problem (both positive and negative)
Step #4: Current situation (hell) → Dream scenario (heaven)
Step #5: Collect the best ad copy you've seen in the 12-18 months.
Step #6: Let AI tools break down the ad copy, make a template/framework, and test it on various topics.
Step #7: Market Awareness and market sophistication match
Step #8: Brainstorm attention grabbing hooks, open loops, and cliff hangers.
Step #9: Write using the Simplest Frameworks: AIDVVA, CPMT, and PWAT
Step #10: Edit using CUBA, NESB, and RCI.
Step #11: Get free AI voice tool to read your copy.
Do You Have Any Questions? I’m going to answer your questions in the next 48 hours...
I’ll go back to this post before I drop my second post.

Oh, and I have a question for you:
Which of the steps did you find the most insightful?
Let me know in the comments below and let's geek about copywriting!
To Helping You Win,
Miguel Campaner
P.S. Do you want me to create a YouTube video for each step?
I can demonstrate to you how to do it in more detail. If there's at least 100 people who want to see that video, I'll record it.

PROMPT #1:

You’re a world class copywriter who specializes in writing HIGH-CURIOSITY emails that grab attention. Then funnel that attention towards any offer you’re tasked with promoting. You write compelling, benefit-rich subject lines that are loaded with curiosity. To where your prospect would feel anxiety if they failed to open your emails. Then once they open the email, you’re a MASTER at amplifying that curiosity to create desire towards a solution that is designed to solve your prospects’ most urgent pain points and help them achieve their desired outcome. Your ONLY job is to move the sales process ahead ONE step. In other words, your PRIMARY objective to get the prospect EXCITED about the unique solution you’re teasing in the email. And they should feel extremely motivated to click the link at the end of the email so they can find out MORE about the solution. For every 100 prospects who open your email, 99 of them should want to click the link at the end. Anything less than that is automatically considered a failure.

I want you to write email leads and hooks for me. Here are the different types of Email leads

#1. Story Leads
Type 1: Time, Place, Tension
"It was 2 AM. I was staring at my computer screen, exhausted and frustrated. My online business was failing, and I had no idea how to turn things around. That's when I stumbled upon a strategy that would change everything..."
Type 2: Climax Opening
"I couldn't believe my eyes. My bank account balance had just hit six figures - all from a simple online business I started in my spare time. Here's how it happened..."

#2. Secret Leads
Type 1: There's ONE THING (blind)
"There's ONE THING successful entrepreneurs do differently that separates them from the rest. It's not what you think, and I'm about to reveal it to you..."
Type 2: Unique mechanism (direct)
"The 'Reverse Funnel Method' is helping ordinary people build 6-figure online businesses in record time. Here's how it works..."

#3. Problem Leads
Type 1: Root cause of problem reveal
"The real reason you're not losing weight isn't lack of willpower or a slow metabolism. It's a little-known hormone imbalance that's sabotaging your efforts..."
Type 2: Direct problem
"Is your email list growing slower than you'd like? You're not alone. Many businesses struggle with this, but there's a simple solution..."
Type 3: Problem Signs
"Bloating is one of the many signs you may experience serious disease sooner than later."

#4. Solution Leads

Type 1: Unique mechanism reveal
"The '5-Minute Focus Technique' is helping busy professionals double their productivity without working longer hours. Here's how it works..."
Type 2: Direct solution
"Discover how our new AI-powered software can automate your entire social media marketing strategy in just 3 clicks..."
Type 3: Indirect solution

Type 3: Counterintuitive
"Can working less actually make you more productive? It sounds counterintuitive, but what if I told you that the secret to skyrocketing your efficiency lies in doing less, not more?"

I want you to create 3 hooks per lead type.

My target market: Filipino copywriters who want to make more money as a copywriter. They want to scale. The #1 problem is not knowing what to do next, mindset problems, and not sure what to do next

PROMPT #2:

I want you to write an email using this:

"Can charging higher rates actually help you land more clients? It sounds crazy, but what if I told you that the secret to becoming a sought-after Filipino copywriter lies in raising your prices, not lowering them?"

The email must follow this framework:

PROMPT #1: Vague or Unclear Language:
Today, you're an expert in direct-response copy with an emphasis on persuasion, emotional impact and conversions.
We're going to go through a "copy-chief" exercise. The purpose of this exercise is to take existing copy and make it more persuasive, emotional and powerful to ultimately increase conversions.
In this exercise you're going to help to clarify copy by removing unclear or confusing language. Here are some of the different elements to look for:
Ambiguous language: Using words or phrases with multiple meanings, which can lead to confusion.
Long and complex sentences: Sentences that are too long or have multiple clauses can be difficult to follow.
Passive voice: Using passive voice can sometimes make sentences less clear and harder to understand.
Redundancy: Repeating the same information or using unnecessary words can make writing unclear and harder to read.
Lack of context: Failing to provide enough background information or context for the reader to understand the topic.
Overuse of pronouns: Using too many pronouns, especially when it's unclear which noun they refer to, can make writing vague and confusing.
Unnecessary jargon or complicated language: Using complicated language when simpler words or phrases would be more appropriate.
Lack of transitions: Failing to use appropriate transitions between ideas, paragraphs, or sections can make writing disjointed and hard to follow.
Unexplained assumptions: Making assumptions that the reader has certain knowledge without providing explanations can lead to confusion.
Lack of examples or evidence: Failing to provide concrete examples or evidence to support claims can make writing less clear and persuasive.
Inconsistent terminology: Using different terms to refer to the same concept throughout a piece of writing can be confusing for the reader.
Now, using this framework, please evaluate the following text so we can identify anything that makes it vague, unclear or confusing. Make a numbered list of all corrections that should be made while explaining your reasoning (and referencing the above list).

Our enhanced examples should use casual, conversational language that still paints descriptive pictures. It should feel like a friend talking to another friend. It should use short, rhythmic language. It should generally have a lower reading level (meaning fewer consonants in the words) and should NOT be overly poetic.
Please process this instruction and then I'll provide you with the text.
Process this, then I'll provide you with the text.
PROMPT #2: Make It Conversational
Today, you're an expert in direct-response copy with an emphasis on persuasion, emotional impact and conversions. We're going to go through a "copy-chief" exercise. The purpose of this exercise is to take existing copy and make it more conversational, so that it engages the reader more and becomes more persuasive.
To do this, we're going to do the following:
Focus on adding "rhythm" to the copy. This means that we use a mixture of short and long sentences that vary.
In addition, you can use triplets. These are series of 3 sentences in order that create a sense of building momentum.
Finally, you'll add in more "conversational inflections" like the ones I've provided below.
Here's a list of those "conversational inflections":
Okay, But check this out, You know what?, Guess what, I mean, Seriously, Listen, Well, here's the thing, Actually, To be honest, In fact, Let me tell you, So, here's the deal, And the best part?, Can you believe it?, Now, imagine this, Trust me, Think about it, What's even crazier is, Anyway, I kid you not, Just picture this, On top of that, Here's what's interesting, But here's the kicker, You won't believe this, No kidding, I've got to say, So, get this, That's not all, You might be wondering, Hold on a second, It's like this, Look, let me explain, Now, this is where it gets good, Just think for a moment, And you know what's even better?, Not only that, The craziest part is.
You'll also include relevant transitions like:
Anyway, Also, Plus, Moving On, etc.
We don't need to include these transitions and "conversational inflections" in every sentence. Just sprinkle them in here and there to keep things moving forward.

Our enhanced examples should should use casual, conversational language that still paints descriptive pictures. It should feel like a friend talking to another friend. It should use short, rhythmic language. It should generally have a lower reading level (meaning fewer consonants in the words) and should NOT be overly poetic.
Don't go over the top with this conversational language.
Once you've processed this, I'll provide you with the text. Please organize all suggestions in a numbered list (there should be a MINIMUM of 20).

PROMPT #3: ADDING IN POWER WORDS
Today, you're an expert in direct-response copy with an emphasis on persuasion, emotional impact and conversions. We're going to go through a "copy-chief" exercise. The purpose of this exercise is to take existing copy and make it more persuasive, emotional and powerful to ultimately increase conversions.
We're going to do that by actually adding what are called "power words." These are words that are emotionally charged and create a visceral action.
What I want you to do is process the following "power words" organized by category below.
Then I'm going to provide you with some text. What I'd like you to do is read through text and identify any places where we can replace existing words with power words.
Then you'll make a NUMBERED list of quoted text with your suggestion immediately below.
We don't want to be heavy-handed with this. Sometimes, adding a power word is going to make the text feel unnatural and we want to avoid that.
So we should likely only use these words every 80-100 words. Meaning that we'll probably end up with around 10 suggestions total.
Below are the words.
GREED POWER WORDS:
At the top: Bank, Bargain, Beautiful, Before, Best, Big, Billion, Bold, Bonanza, Booked Solid, Booming, Bonus, Boss, Cash, Cheap, Cheatsheet, Clever, Costly, Deadline, Discount, Dollar, Don't miss out, Double, Earn

PROMPT #4: Remove Qualifiers & Adverbs
Today, you're an expert in direct-response copy with an emphasis on persuasion, emotional impact and conversions. We're going to go through a "copy-chief" exercise. The purpose of this exercise is to take existing copy and make it more persuasive, emotional and powerful to ultimately increase conversions.
To do this, we're going to be identifying any qualifiers or adverbs that make the writing sound more hesitant or unclear.
For example, we could have a statement like…
"The steps outlined in this book are extremely effective in keeping your reader engaged."
This statement is more emphatic if I eliminate the adverb "extremely"
So we should be looking for adverbs that end in "-ly" like extremely to get rid of, as well as other qualifiers (i.e. probably, maybe, kind of, almost).
Here's a bigger (but not exhaustive) list: Extremely, probably, maybe, kind of, almost, clearly, accurately, deliberately, briskly, eagerly, fortunately, happily, quietly, rapidly, easily, seriously, gently, carefully, suddenly, honestly, playfully, truly, wisely, frequently, rarely.
Please make a numbered list of any "quoted sentences" from the original text that contains "qualifier words" that can make the writing come across as doubtful or not confident and BOLD each qualifier word you see. You should ONLY list sentences that contain these qualifiers.

Just process this, then when you're ready, I'll provide you with the text.

HOW TO IMPROVE SALES SKILLS:

Here are the 4 prompts you can use to take your sales skills to the next level—with AI.
🎯 Goal: Spot opportunities on how to improve your own sales convos by learning how AI positions your offer, addresses objections and asks questions.
Prompt: “Let's role play. You [insert your offer], and I [insert your target market profile]. Let's have a conversation around what you do so we can determine if we're a good fit to work together."
🎯 Goal: Learn how human psychology and persuasion techniques are used in a sales convo.
Prompt #1 "Okay, let's stop the role play. Now, I'd like you to highlight the key behaviors you demonstrated on this role play especially how you handle objections, answer questions, deliver your pitch, etc... Then list your recommendations on how I can apply these behaviors in my own sales conversations."
Prompt #2 "Great! Now can you list the key psychology concepts and persuasion techniques at play in our conversation? Make sure to highlight what the concept is, how you demonstrated it and why it works."
🎯 Goal: Become more confident in taking DCs by having a mock DC with ChatGPT or Gemini (or any Gen AI na may voice feature)
PS. For this prompt, you will speak NOT CHAT with AI para mock call talaga 🙂
Prompt: "I want to role-play a sales call where you act as a prospect who booked a call with me to learn more about how I can help you [insert your offer].
* You’ll have a specific pain point that aligns with my offer
* You should ask relevant questions, share objections, and engage in a natural back-and-forth conversation.
* Your level of interest can vary—some prospects are skeptical, some need convincing, and some are ready to buy.
* Push back when needed, seek clarity, and test my ability to handle objections and close the deal.

I'll lead the call using my script, but you should make it dynamic, like a real human conversation. Let me know when you're ready."

🎯 Goal: Get coaching & feedback on your mock DC so you'd know what to do differently next time.

Prompt: "Now that we've finished the role-play, give me constructive feedback based on the following:

Did I effectively expose your pain point?

* Did I ask the right questions to uncover your real struggle?
* Did I go deep enough, or did I stay too surface-level?

Did I position myself as the right person to solve your problem?

* Did I clearly communicate my expertise and how my solution works?
* Did I make you feel confident that I could help?

Did I deliver my pitch effectively?

* Was my invitation clear, compelling and aligned with your needs?
* Did I create a sense of urgency or excitement about working together?

Give me honest feedback on what worked, what didn't, and what I should improve for next time."

With these prompts, we literally have no excuse why we won't feel comfortable (and even confident) having sales conversations with prospects.

I'm curious, which of these prompts are you excited to try?

Why You Must Master “Micro-Stories” in Copy to Maximize Attention and Boost Conversions…

Not all copywriting stories need to be extensive.
Strategic micro-stories—brief narrative moments within your copy—can create emotional connection without requiring significant space.
This is especially important right now.
The average attention span is getting lower.
If I can recall, humans only have a 6 second attention span.
I wouldn’t be surprised if it’s now at 4 seconds or less.
I mean, we now create apps that TRAIN us to have lower attention spans.
That’s why knowing how to create an emotional connection in less 3-4 seconds is important.
This is where micro-stories come in…
Types of Effective Micro-Stories
Origin stories: Brief narratives about how your product or company came to be
Moment-of-truth stories: Short accounts of when your product made a critical difference
Contrast stories: Quick before/after snapshots showing transformation
Day-in-the-life stories: Brief glimpses of how your product fits into daily routines
Problem-solved stories: Concise examples of specific challenges your product overcomes
Placing Micro-Stories Strategically in Your Copy
Micro-stories work particularly well:
In introductory paragraphs to establish relevance
After benefit statements to illustrate them in action
Before calls to action to provide emotional momentum
Within feature descriptions to demonstrate real-world value
In FAQs to address specific questions or concerns
Examples of effective micro-stories:
Origin micro-story (2-3 sentences):
"Our founder created the first prototype at her kitchen table after her third sleepless night with a colicky newborn. What began as one exhausted mother's solution has now helped over 200,000 families reclaim their sleep and sanity."
Moment-of-truth micro-story (2-3 sentences):
"When the power went out during Hurricane Laura, the Johnson family's backup generator failed—but their SolarReserve battery continued powering their essential appliances for 37 hours until utility service was restored. 'That's when we knew this wasn't just an eco-friendly choice, it was the security our family needed,' Michael Johnson recalls."

Contrast micro-story (2-3 sentences):
"Last year, Emma spent 15 hours each month manually reconciling expenses and creating reports. Now she completes the entire process in 45 minutes with three clicks, giving her back nearly two full workdays every month."
Day-in-the-life micro-story (2-3 sentences):
"Sarah used to dread her morning routine—hitting snooze three times, rushing through breakfast, and arriving at work already exhausted. Now she wakes to gentle vibrations from her SleepCycle alarm, enjoys her perfectly brewed coffee (started automatically), and arrives at work energized after her 20-minute guided meditation during her commute."
Day-in-the-life micro-story (2-3 sentences):
"When Tara's toddler spilled grape juice on their new white sofa, panic set in. But one spray of CleanShield created a reaction that lifted the stain completely in seconds. 'That $19 bottle just saved my $2,000 couch,' she told us, still amazed at how quickly disaster was averted."

How to Craft Converting Sales Copy WITHOUT Conducting Deep Research-by Only Using Counter-Arguments and Cognitive Behavioral Theory...

Most copywriters are stuck in research paralysis.

Let’s end that.

You actually don’t need to perform a week of research to write front-end ads that convert.

All you have to do is follow a proven step-by-step framework…

That we’ve been using to write FB ads with 7% CTRs and emails that generate $2K-$4K per send.

Let’s start…

1. The Attention Triangle: Get, Retain, Isolate

The first challenge of any sales copy is capturing attention in a world where the average person sees 4,000-10,000 ads daily. But getting attention isn't enough-you need to retain and isolate it.

➡️ Counter-Arguments: The Pattern Interrupt

The fastest way to grab attention is by challenging existing beliefs. When everyone zigs, you zag.

For example, while most fitness programs claim "you need to work out 5 days a week to see results," a counter-argument might be:

"The 3-day workout myth is keeping you from your fitness goals. Research shows that strategic 20-minute workouts three times weekly produce better results than daily hour-long sessions."

This works because it creates cognitive dissonance-the uncomfortable feeling when confronted with information that contradicts existing beliefs.

The brain naturally seeks to resolve this discomfort by paying attention.

➡️ Going Against Mainstream Ideas

Look at what Dave Asprey did with Bulletproof Coffee.

When conventional wisdom said "fat is bad" and "breakfast is the most important meal," he promoted putting butter in coffee and skipping breakfast altogether.

This counter-positioning helped build a $100M+ brand.

To apply this, identify the dominant belief in your market and ask: "What if the opposite were true?" Then find legitimate evidence to support your contrarian position.

➡️ Unmasking Limiting Beliefs

Another powerful attention-grabber is revealing a hidden belief that's sabotaging your audience's success.

For example: "The 'hustle harder' mindset isn't why entrepreneurs succeed-it's actually what's keeping you broke.

The most profitable business owners I know work fewer hours but focus on this one overlooked factor instead..."

This works because it provides an alternative explanation for why your audience hasn't achieved their desired outcome despite following conventional advice.

2. Creating the Gap: Information, Problem, Solution

Once you have attention, you need to intensify desire by creating a gap between where your prospect is and where they want to be-a gap only your solution can fill.

➡️ The New Cause Technique

Reframing the cause of a problem instantly positions your solution as unique.

Example: "Weight loss programs fail because they focus on calories, not hormones. Your body isn't a math equation-it's a chemistry lab.

That's why our approach targets insulin resistance first, making weight loss automatic rather than a constant struggle."

By repositioning the cause (hormones, not calories), you create a natural opening for your solution.

➡️ The Solution Assembly Method

Another approach is to "assemble" a solution that appears comprehensive compared to "partial" alternatives.

For example, instead of just offering "SEO services," you might position your offering as "The Traffic Trifecta: combining technical SEO, content optimization, AND authority building-the three elements most agencies only deliver one of."

This positions competitors as incomplete while making your solution seem obvious and necessary.

3. Explaining Action Incentives

People need clear reasons to act now rather than later.

This requires addressing trade-offs and making action seem both valuable and easy.

The Trade-Off Clarification

Explicitly address what they're trading and what they're getting:

"Yes, this program requires a $997 investment-about what most people spend on coffee and takeout in three months. But unlike those expenses, this is a one-time investment that will generate an additional $3,000-$5,000 monthly within 90 days."

This frames the decision as a clear value exchange rather than just a cost.

➡️ Future Pacing

Help prospects visualize themselves already experiencing the benefits:

"In 2 weeks, you can walk into your next client meeting with absolute confidence in your pricing. When they ask for a discount, you calmly explain your value without that familiar knot in your stomach. They nod, understanding that quality like yours commands premium rates. Two days later, they sign your proposal-at full price."

This technique bypasses logical resistance by creating an emotional experience of already having the solution.

➡️ Timeline Specificity

Vague promises create hesitation. Specific timelines create confidence:
"Within 14 days, you'll have your first automated email sequence generating sales while you sleep. By day 30, your entire follow-up system will be running without your involvement. And within 60 days, you'll be generating 30% more revenue from the exact same traffic."
Specificity makes outcomes feel real and achievable.
4. Identity-Based Call to Action
The most powerful CTAs aren't about "buying a thing"-they're about becoming the person your prospect wants to be.
➡️ Identity Alignment
Your CTA should reflect who they aspire to become:
Instead of "Buy our trading course," try: "Join the small circle of independent investors who make decisions based on data, not emotion or hype."
This works because people make decisions that align with their desired identity.
➡️ Avoiding Negative Identity
Equally powerful is helping people avoid identities they fear:
"You don't want to be seen as a the "incompetent" boss to your employees when talking about systems and delegation. Become the founder who built systems that run without constant attention."
This leverages loss aversion-the psychological principle that we're more motivated to avoid losses than achieve equivalent gains.
➡️ Creating New Identity Catégorie Jeunes - الاصناف الشبانيةries
The most sophisticated approach is creating an entirely new identity category:
When Ramit Sethi coined "Rich Life" as an identity, he separated himself from both traditional financial advisors and the FIRE (Financial Independence, Retire Early) movement.
He wasn't just selling courses-he was offering membership in a new category of people who enjoy spending on what they love while still building wealth.
5. Optimizing with Cognitive Behavioral Theory
Understanding cognitive biases and heuristics gives you tremendous leverage in crafting persuasive copy.
➡️ Authority Heuristic
People attribute greater accuracy to the opinion of an authority figure:
"Developed by former Harvard Medical School researcher Dr. Sarah Chen, this protocol addresses the root cause most sleep specialists overlook."
➡️ Scarcity Bias
We value what's limited or potentially unavailable:
"We only work with 12 clients per quarter to ensure personalized attention. Currently, only 2 spots remain for Q2."

➡️ Social Proof Heuristic
People tend to follow the actions of a larger group:
"Join over 47,000 business owners who've used this framework to double their closing rate while raising prices."
➡️ Attacking Competitor Claims
Identify and dismantle flawed thinking in competitor claims:
"Most AI writing tools claim to 'understand your brand voice.' But that's impossible without understanding the psychological triggers that make your specific audience respond. They're using overgeneralization-applying a one-size-fits-all approach to a nuanced problem."
Then offer your alternative belief: "AI needs human strategic direction to be effective. Our hybrid approach gives you the speed of AI with the persuasive power of human psychology."
Example: Counter-Argument Copy in Action
Here's how these principles might look in an actual ad:
➡️ Headline: "Why 'Write Every Day' Is Terrible Advice for Aspiring Authors"
➡️ Opening: Most writing coaches tell you to write daily. They're wrong-and that advice is why 97% of started books never get finished.
➡️ Counter-Argument: Research from the University of Pennsylvania shows that creative professionals produce better work in focused bursts followed by recovery periods-not through daily grinding.
➡️ New Cause: Writer's block isn't caused by lack of discipline. It's caused by neurological fatigue from forcing creativity on an unreceptive brain.
➡️ Solution Assembly: The Productive Author Protocol combines strategic writing sessions, psychological priming techniques, and momentum-based scheduling-creating a complete system rather than just another writing tip.
➡️ Trade-Off Clarification: Yes, you'll invest $39 in this program-about what most people spend on streaming services monthly. But unlike passive entertainment, this investment will help you finally complete the book that's been stuck in your head for years.
➡️ Future Pacing: Imagine holding your published book in your hands at your launch party. Friends and family congratulate you, and someone asks, "How did you finally finish it?" You smile, knowing you found a smarter approach instead of forcing yourself to follow unsustainable advice.
➡️ Identity-Based CTA: Join the new generation of strategic authors who create exceptional books through science-backed methods-not outdated "hustle culture" myths.
Putting It All Together

The beauty of this approach is that it allows you to create compelling copy without spending weeks on research. Instead, you're leveraging psychological principles and strategic positioning to create messages that resonate.

To implement this approach:

Identify the dominant claims or beliefs in your market

Develop legitimate counter-arguments that challenge these beliefs

Create a gap between current solutions and what's actually needed

Make taking action both valuable and easy to visualize

Frame decisions around identity, not just features or benefits

Leverage cognitive biases to strengthen your persuasive appeal

I hope you found this useful.
